

Once you've started the conversation, you can begin to ask questions like:

- ▶ When did you first start feeling like this?
- ▶ Did something happen that made you begin to feel this way?
- ▶ Are you having thoughts of hurting yourself?
- ▶ Are you having thoughts of suicide?
- ▶ What can I do to best support you right now?
- ▶ Have you thought about getting help?

Remember that simple, encouraging responses go a long way

- ▶ You're not alone, even if you feel like you are. I'm here for you, and I want to help you in any way I can
- ▶ It may not seem possible right now, but the way you're feeling will change
- ▶ I might not be able to understand exactly what you're going through or how you feel, but I care about you and want to help
- ▶ When you want to give up, or feel overwhelmed by emotion, try to just focus on getting through the next minute, hour, or day — whatever you can manage

Being yourself, staying calm and positive, and listening without judgment — these all create a safe, supportive space for the LGBT Veteran to speak openly about how they're feeling. Remember that you can't solve someone else's mental health challenges. The best thing you can do is support them on their journey.

Remember: You can make a difference, and it starts with one conversation.

It's important that you talk to someone right away if you have thoughts of harming yourself, death, or suicide. You can always contact the Veterans Crisis Line by calling 1-800-273-8255 PRESS 1, using the online chat, or texting to 838255. These services provide free, confidential support 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year.

For additional information and resources to help a Veteran you're concerned about, visit Start the Conversation: New Tools for Veteran Suicide Prevention at www.VeteransCrisisLine.net/starttheconversation